References Distance and Time Calculator FAQ (WebVersion) Category:DistanceDoomed any hope that Tom Hanks would someday be an Irish/British actor? The Associated Press reports that the Oscar-winning actor has relocated to Ireland, where he has acquired an official listing in the country's census. Hanks (born Thomas Hanks in Fort Worth, Texas, on Aug. 19, 1955) is shown on his cover page as being a biological citizen of the United States, having been raised in the United States. He was educated in the U.S., but is believed to have lived in Ireland for some years before his official census registration. The report noted that the United States and Ireland have had a somewhat rocky relationship in recent years, and there have been reports that Hanks had been living in Ireland for a considerable period before his listing on the census. Update: The Associated Press has now withdrawn its report. From the AP report: "The world that he knows, his homeland and its society, has completely changed for him since his birth," said Sean Barrett, Irish director general of the Census of Population, which conducts the census. "He has been there 12 years. He has dual citizenship." "It will be very interesting to see what happens if and when he makes an application for citizenship in Ireland," Barrett said. "If he does, I will be very surprised if he is not successful." Irish census officials said that it does not appear that Hanks is eligible to apply for dual citizenship, as Americans may only become Irish citizens after living in the country for at least five years. As of June 2005, there were 40,887 men and 46,618 women
