This is an account of a 46 year old patient suffering from a healing fistula of the vagina. A biopsy had revealed a carcinoma of the cervix. After radiotherapy and surgery only a minor improvement of the healing of the fistula could be achieved. The present paper examines the contribution of local tumour factors and of radiotherapy to the healing of the fistula. The importance of this possible complication in the follow-up of cervix cancers is underlined./* * We have a single interrupt pin for the PF and MF. *

This makes sense because we can deploy, when things are ready, we can update the UI and push a change to the main branch that would overwrite the UI. The problem is that we are currently doing everything in git bash and at this moment we have a lot of branches of gh-pages and the UI itself and it's a pain to move between them every time we want to deploy. My question is what is the best way to move from our master to gh-pages without having to move through all the other branches in a separate "deploy" command. A: I think you're looking for something like: git checkout gh-
